The work of Chattanooga band Flatlands Jump forms a bridge between the search for tangible meaning and a more spiritual sense of accomplishment. With origins that stretch back to 2012, when musician Kevin Gray began writing and recording songs with an acoustic guitar, keyboards and a drum machine, the band's sound has been in a perpetual state of refinement and evolution in the intervening years. Gray eventually employed the talents of drummer Jacob Ducote, guitarist Luke Clarke, bassist Ben Davis and keyboardist Daniel Shults. On their debut release, "The Situation EP," the band injects a buoyant pop euphoria into their Americana inclinations, creating a glossy but earnest set of songs that speaks to intimate experiences and pastoral geographies. The music combines the laid-back reflection of classic rock 'n' roll with the melodicism of modern roots rock. Tapped within each track is a plentiful vein of the blues, a howling honesty. -Joshua Pickard, Nooga.com
